The Party Rock fire at Lake Lure burned for weeks during a long drought in November 2016. Fortunately, no structures were lost and no people died. Why? How did the forest service manage this incident - with 1,000+ firefighters from all over the US – plus deal with multiple complex wildland fires all across Western North Carolina? How does WNC wildland fire management differ from other US regions that were burning in drought conditions at the same time as Party Rock? Bring your questions to this informative Brown Bag for answers.

Caleb Jones was raised in Greer, SC in the Upstate. After receiving his BS in Forest Resource Management from Clemson University in 2002, the pursuit of forest management opportunities took Caleb to the White River National Forest in NW Colorado and then to the Alligator River National Wildlife Refuge in Eastern NC. Experience in these locales developed his interest in natural resource management, and especially in wildland fire suppression. Caleb then transitioned to the North Carolina Forest Service, where he is currently the Assistant Regional Forester for Fire Control in Region 3, the mountain region headquartered in Asheville. Much of his time is spent coordinating and/or teaching wildland fire courses, developing training opportunities for Region 3 personnel, and supporting the districts in resourcing their wildland fire incidents. Caleb has been a forester and wildland firefighter for 16 years.
